Nextlink reports successful participation in TETRA World Congress in Hong Kong

- Nextlink exhibited its INVISIO® Pro headsets at the TETRA World Congress held in Hong Kong 26th – 29th May
- A number of new contacts was made with potential partners and customers

TETRA (Terrestrial Trunked Radios) is an open digital standard for mobile communication. The standard makes it possible for a wide range of users of professional communications equipment to communicate with each other .

Nextlink's CEO Lars Højgård Hansen says: "The market for wireless handheld radios using the TETRA standard is growing rapidly as more and more markets globally are adapting the standard. For Nextlink these are very important markets as the majority of the users are found within Military, Public Safety, Commercial and Industry. Many of these users work in very noisy and difficult communication environments where headsets like our INVISIO Pro are very beneficial.

The TETRA World Congress in Hong Kong was our first participation in these markets and our presence was in line with our increased focus on the professional markets. I am pleased to say that we made a number of important contacts with potential partners and customers globally and received very positive feedback" Hansen ends.
